FIND BODY OF ONE OF FIVE WHO SANK

Four Other Victims of Thomas F. O'Brien Disaster Still Lie Amid Wreckage.

THREE OF CREW SAVED

Captain and Engineer Cling to Lifeboat and Another Man Swims Ashore.

The body of David Hennessy, mate of the tug Thomas F. O'Brien, who, with four other men, was drowned last night off pier No. 56, South Brooklyn, was recovered from the tug to-day. The other men drowned were Fred Reigs and a Porto Rican, known as Chester, both firemen; two Norwegian deckhands, each known as Matt. were made out clinging to the lifebont and lines were thrown to them from the deck of the Flahnery and both were hauled aboard the rescuing tug. No sight was had of Tucker, who was then swimming for the shore.

Captain Simmons looked in vain for the rest of the crew. The scows went adrift, breaking their hawsers, and no attention was given them. The Flannery headed for the Battery and word was sent to the owners of the O'Brien. The police were notified and the police boat from Harbor A station was sent out to make another search.

Edward O'Brien, one of the tug's own-ers, dispatched three tugs to the scene of the wreck. He also had the Merritt, Chapman Wrecking Company send one of their wrecking scows to the relief of the jug. Capt. Conine remained on the tug Flannery, all night. He is over seventy years old, but was apparently not nurt by his experience in the water.

GOES MAD. ATTACKS WIFE. Takes Three Policemen and Doctor to Overcome Joseph Laboder.

Joseph Laboder, an iron molder, thirty-seven years old, became violently insane at the breakfast table to-day and started for his wife with the avowed intention of throwing her from a window of their flat on the third floor of the tenement at No. 67 Kent avenue, Williamsburg. The woman screamed and ran around the room, dodging her insane husband. Neighbors entered the flat and sucman of Williamsburg Hospital, with the aid of the policemen, got Laboder into a straight jacket and sent him to Kings County Hospital.
